Lux spending: Highs,

When you live in one of your city's wealthiest ZIP codes, perhaps that's an indication that you needn't spend too much time worrying about budgeting for luxuries like whiskey, jewelry and dining out. Regardless, data and mapping software company Esri keeps track of consumer spending data that offers an insider's snapshot of how the upper crust spend their income.

FYI: The averages account for spendings by household, which means that, for example, women and children are accounted for in the "men's suits" figures. We're willing to bet the average man in Terrace Park is dropping more than one Benjamin on suits per year.
